

Oklahoma Department of Transportation director Gary Ridley presents a replica sign dedicating I-235 at 36th St. the “Zach D. Taylor Jr. Memorial Interchange” to Alison, Elizabeth and Lauren Taylor, the wife and daughters of former ACOG Executive Director Zach Taylor. As enacted by Senate Bill 1155, passed by the Oklahoma Legislature in 2008, signs naming the interchange after Taylor were placed on both I-235 and N.W. 36th St.

Alan Kirkpatrick representing the Crown Heights – Edgemere Heights Homeowners' Association points toward their adjacent neighborhood prior to presenting a letter of appreciation to ODOT at an event celebrating the completion of the I-235 at N.W. 36th St. interchange reconstruction project today, October 3.

Association of Central Oklahoma Governments Executive Director John Johnson, Debby Williams of Oklahoma Arts in Public Places, Alison Taylor, widow of former ACOG Executive Director Zach Taylor, Federal Highway Administrator Gary Corino, Greater Oklahoma City Chamber President and CEO Roy Williams, Oklahoma County Commissioner Willa Johnson, Dean Schirf of the Greater Oklahoma City Chamber, Oklahoma City Vice Mayor Larry McAtee, City of Oklahoma City Manager Jim Couch, Bob Alfson of Crown Heights – Edgemere Heights Homeowners' Association and Oklahoma Department of Transportation Director Gary Ridley paint a portion of a buffalo as part of the Oklahoma themed aesthetics running along the walls on the I-235 at 36th St. interchange reconstruction project which was dedicated October 3.