This year we celebrate a century of transportation in Oklahoma. As we look back on these past 100 years and the rich history they hold, we realize how far we have come. Technology has allowed us to advance in ways we once could only imagine. Our state's formative years taught us tenacity and initiative as we created - literally, from the ground up - a network of transportation that would merge with surrounding states and the nation.

With more than 12,000 highway miles stretching across our state, I invite you to explore America's most diverse terrain per mile found right here in Oklahoma. From towering mesas and spacious plains in the west, to rolling hills and mountainsides in the east, to the colorful historic Route 66 which spans more miles here than any other state, Oklahoma offers a treasure of stunning scenery and enticing adventures.

A superior transportation system is vital to our state's economy and mobility. I'm proud to begin this term as governor of the Great State of Oklahoma and to celebrate the beginning of the second century of our state's transportation agency and the strides it has made.

Sincerely,

Mary Fallin
